More than ever before, sports organisations need leaders and decision-makers who understand the global challenges influencing the future of sport and who are quick to take decisions within an ethical framework.

In my role as UEFA’s president, it is important for me to understand the dynamics of a fast-moving environment and to take decisions that will have a positive impact on UEFA’s future and foster the growth and protection of European football. This cannot be achieved in isolation: I rely on other leaders who grasp the challenges facing us and have a full understanding of good governance and transparency.

The Executive Master in Global Sport Governance (MESGO) was developed to provide sports industry leaders with the tools to anticipate forthcoming challenges, to exploit the dynamics of the environment and to accelerate the development of sound sport governance. Over the past decade, MESGO has proved to be a transformative pathway for sports decision-makers and has had a positive impact on the development of many sports organisations worldwide.

Cooperation between academic institutions, public authorities and sports governing bodies is a key feature of the MESGO programme. Based as it is on practice as well as theory, the programme involves many high-level practitioners, who provide personal expertise and real-life examples from a range of stakeholder organisations. Furthermore, with industry leaders both speaking and taking part in the programme, MESGO provides participants with a unique network to help them to grow their organisations and nurture their own leadership skills.

We at UEFA have given our full support to the programme in the knowledge that it benefits not only football, but the sporting world as a whole. We can be proud of MESGO’s impact. Important new benchmarks have been set, careers have been accelerated, and the programme will continue to play an essential role in giving senior managers the tools and skills to improve sport governance – enhancing sport’s overall well-being, unity and credibility at the same time.

Now is your chance to be part of it!
WHAT IS MESGO?
MESGO is a unique, ambitious training programme for sports industry leaders. It is characterised by:
• its global perspective and strong alliance between sports experts and academia;
• its multidisciplinary approach and in-depth analysis of legal, political and economic issues;
• its focus on the key current and future challenges faced by sports organisations;
• its strong network of like-minded sports experts;
• lectures at the heart of sports organisations.

HOW IS MESGO ORGANISED?
The programme is tailored to the schedule of working professionals. It comprises:
• nine one-week sessions, plus a final oral presentation and graduation ceremony, to be completed within 24 months;
• a worldwide programme: with six of the nine sessions in Europe, two in North America and one in Asia;
• continuous assessment based on case-study analyses, attendance and participation, and two projects directly linked to your organisation’s strategic objectives, which will constitute your MESGO thesis.

WHO IS MESGO DESIGNED FOR?
This programme is designed for experienced managers and executives working in:
• national and international sports federations;
• clubs, leagues and trade unions;
• public authorities and not-for-profit organisations;
• partner organisations of sports bodies: media organisations, sponsors, etc.
SESSION 1

Introduction to global sport governance

The purpose of this introductory session is to develop an understanding of the institutional and economic environment in which international sport operates and to define governance concepts in the context of sport specifically, including the European model of sport. This session seeks to explain the fundamental mission and objectives of sport’s governing bodies.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the stakeholder universe in a global sports context;
- the role of international and national federations/associations;
- governance structures, boards and the performance of sports organisations;
- indicators for better governance;
- the impact of globalisation on the organisation of sport.

SESSION 2

Competition design and financial sustainability

In this session, the focus moves to illustrating the range of contrasting competition designs and regulatory systems employed by different sports for successful competitions, outlining their respective strengths and weaknesses in the context of sport’s particular economic framework.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the importance of achieving competitive balance/uncertainty of outcome in successful competitions, including an analysis of the effectiveness of the array of coordination, redistribution and regulatory mechanisms available to competition organisers to achieve it;
- the specific role of licensing and financial fair play systems in achieving economic stability in a professional sport;
- the regulation of sports labour markets, including an assessment of key policy measures, such as the role of the transfer market and salary management systems;
- the relationship between the management of professional club and national team competitions;
- successful sports competitions as vehicles for distributing solidarity payments to the grassroots and development of sport.

SESSION 3

Legal framework

This session aims to describe the very broad legal context in which sport’s governing bodies operate, raise awareness of the range of legal issues they face and present the legal mechanisms available to sport’s governing bodies in their governance and regulatory roles.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the external management of legal disputes, i.e. the different sources of international sports law and the role of the Court of Arbitration for Sport;
- the internal settlement of legal disputes, i.e. the management of a legal department and the disciplinary powers of sport’s governing bodies;
- the legal and political framework for sports in Europe, i.e. EU law and its application to sport, and the role of the Council of Europe;
- the critical importance of legal risk management and the different practical ways to achieve it;
- EU lobbying.
Ethics and integrity

The main objective of this session is to demonstrate how important it is for sports institutions to take ethical issues into account. First, this session encourages critical thinking and value-driven decision-making. Second, it will help to understand precisely the range of ethical issues and challenges in sport by analyzing their characteristics. Third, it will help you to evaluate the systems that give rise to these issues and outline key mechanisms for addressing them.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the theoretical foundation of ethics and integrity in sport, i.e. fairness, respect and equity as practical guidelines for management decision-making;
- contemporary ethical issues in sport, such as corruption, match-fixing and doping, and regulatory mechanisms for addressing them;
- discrimination in sport on the basis of ethnicity, gender, disability, sexual orientation, etc., and policies used to address it;
- the social responsibility of sport and sports organizations (in relation to human rights, violence, etc.);
- sustainability and the legacy of sport events.

Events and participation

This session will aim to develop an understanding of the process of hosting sports events and launching campaigns to increase participation in sport. This process will include public or private authorities and the various stakeholders that operate in different countries at international level.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- sports events: models of governance and operational plans;
- the evolution of bidding and legacy concepts over the years;
- strategies implemented by public authorities to host sports events and to launch participation campaigns;
- strategies by national and international federations to increase participation;
- risk management and crisis communication.

Strategic marketing and communications

The aim of this session is to develop a holistic understanding of and approach to marketing and communication. This session provides a balance of marketing fundamentals, emerging trends and communications strategy, for the purpose of maximizing short and long-term value for sports organizations.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the fundamentals of marketing, including how to build a strong brand;
- the importance of a fan engagement strategy and leveraging digital marketing assets to grow and retain your fan base;
- how sponsorship has evolved and the direction it is taking, with a detailed assessment of the implications for sports organizations;
- the evolving media landscape and how this critical source of revenue is rapidly evolving, with traditional and new broadcasters fighting for fans’ attention, and what this means for rights holders;
- how communication can be used strategically by sport organisation to reach their objectives.

Future of sport

This session aims to deliver an overview of the key challenges that sport’s governing bodies may face in the future. It will explain why China is of particular interest, considering, from an Asian perspective, the main challenges ahead for sport and society and providing managers with tools for the future.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the main challenges for sport in the future;
- methods and tools to anticipate the forthcoming key challenges;
- sports ethics and in China specifically;
- the challenges to the integrity of sporting competitions and broader ethical challenges;
- the development of successful strategies for the future of sports governing bodies.

The North American model

The purpose of this session is to gain a better understanding of how sport is organised in North America. The idea is to analyse professional sport in North America and understand the context in which major leagues emerged and developed, their principles, their regulatory tools and their relationship with their environment.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- the economic and regulatory structure used to achieve competitive balance and financial stability in the four major North American professional sport leagues;
- labour market regulation: player salary regulation, e.g. wage caps and the luxury tax and player recruitment regulation, e.g. the player draft system;
- the revenue-sharing system;
- the use of a collective bargaining agreement as a key element of regulation;
- the tools used to promote gender equality and to fight against discrimination.

Leadership and innovation

The goal of this session is to raise awareness of the need to take innovation into consideration and demonstrate that innovation is not only about using technologies or digital transformation, but must be a general process that structures the management of the organisation and its strategic development, and links it with the skill set needed by those in leadership positions in the sports industry.

During this session, you will notably broaden your knowledge of:
- technologies and the way they will affect sport activities and sport governance;
- the innovation mindset led by start-ups active in the sports industry;
- disruption and change management;
- innovation management and leadership;
- ethics and innovation.

VIVAS & GRADUATION CEREMONY

The viva (the oral defence of a thesis) is the final examination undergone by participants who have been successful in their class participation and continuous assessments. Following the viva, a graduation ceremony will be held at UEFA HQ in Nyon, marking the end of the MESGO journey. After their graduation, participants automatically join the MESGO alumni, a unique network of over 120 sports industry leaders.
One of the nine MESGO sessions is held in New York City, and the participants spend valuable time with people who work in various major league sports. This high-level interaction between senior sports practitioners from both sides of the Atlantic provides a fascinating and unique opportunity to compare the European and North American sports models, where both sides still have so much to learn from each other. The MESGO week in New York City also reflects the truly international, indeed global, nature of modern professional sport.

The MESGO programme offers a unique, once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to strengthen your professional skills with the help of world-class experts – both the speakers and your fellow participants. Personally, I got the chance to grow in my role at the Finnish FA. I focused especially on our ‘One FA’ reform, where the overall objective was to rebuild the whole organisation to be even more relevant and effective for the member clubs. The work done during the MESGO programme enabled us not only to make the necessary decisions, but also to implement this enormous reform. MESGO sessions were held at unique venues around the world and were very applicable to my own work. The programme has given me lifelong friends and a large network of top-class experts in different sectors of the sports world.

If you have not played sports at a high level but now find yourself working in the sports sector, like I did, then this course is a must. The MESGO course is a high-level academic sport-focused course. Whether you are working in a federation, a club or a private sports company, this course will help you to join the dots. International sport is a multibillion-dollar industry developing at an incredibly fast pace. We need to have a better understanding of my strengths, weaknesses and values. As most top executives say, ‘leadership is a journey, not a destination’.

The MESGO programme was a really great experience for me, far beyond my expectations. The courses we shared with more than 20 other senior executives were extremely valuable. The range of people from different countries, sports organisations and businesses, as well as their impressive experience, gave me tremendous inspiration and insight, and increased my confidence in my own analysis and judgement. Through the various sessions I gained excellent academic insight into sport governance, and through discussions with other executives from top sports and business organisations, I gained a better understanding of my strengths, weaknesses and values. As most top executives say, ‘leadership is a journey, not a destination’.

I consider it a privilege to participate in the MESGO sessions, be it as a participant or as a speaker. It is a unique opportunity for interaction between international stakeholders coming from very different sectors. This exchange is, in my opinion, indispensable, as sport does not take place in isolation and is therefore exposed to increasing threats. For me, sport is about much more than scoring, breaking records or collecting medals and titles. Sport is also about values we have to defend together.

The MESGO curriculum is to expose programme participants to the absolute best practice in its ability to transform lives for the better. And, alongside the events are a major challenge. All sorts of risks must be anticipated and complex issues dealt with. Based on strong academic testimonies and the experience of leading specialists in the sports industry, the MESGO programme addresses these challenges and tries to provide solutions and best practices in various fields, including bidding processes, legal issues, knowledge transfer, operations and risk management. This is why the MESGO programme is so unique: it gives participants a toolkit with which to lay the foundations for successful event organisation.
